三、阅读理解（5题）

Li Ming wanted to buy an English dictionary for his new term. At first, he planned to go to a bookstore near his home because he liked reading paper pages before shopping. However, his classmate Chen Jie told him that an online store had a big discount on learning books. Li Ming opened the product page after school and read it carefully. He wanted to compare the online price with the bookstore price before deciding. His mother also reminded him to buy only the book he really needed.

The page showed a new edition of a learner's dictionary. It included useful words, simple English explanations and many example sentences.

Compared with the old edition, it added 500 new words and more pictures. The original price was 120 yuan, but the price before Friday was only 90 yuan. There were clear pictures of the cover, the inside pages and the exercise page. This helped him understand what the product really offered.

Li Ming did not add it to his cart at once. He read the customer reviews first. Most customers gave it a high rating. One review said the pictures made difficult words easier to understand. Another review said the online exercises helped students remember words after class. He noticed that a few reviews talked about slow delivery, so he checked the arrival date. The date was still before the new term. These comments made Li Ming feel sure about his choice.

Finally, Li Ming bought the dictionary with his mother's help. He used it every evening and wrote down five new words a day. When he met a new word in class, he checked the example sentence before writing it in his notebook. He did not buy extra pens or notebooks although the store suggested them. He also learned an important lesson: responsible shopping is not just finding the lowest price. It means comparing products, reading information and buying what we really need.
