三、阅读理解 (5 题)

On Saturday morning, Chen Rui stayed at home and used his smartphone to study. At 8:50, the alarm rang and reminded him of an online English class. He unlocked the phone, logged in to the classroom, and answered questions with his classmates on the screen. The teacher asked students to read a short dialogue, and Chen Rui used earphones so he could hear every word clearly. He also wrote new words in his notebook instead of taking screenshots only.

At noon, Chen Rui wanted to save time, so he opened a food delivery app. He chose a healthy lunch and set the desired delivery time. The takeout arrived at 12:20, and he had enough time to go over the morning lesson after lunch. Before paying, he checked the price range and the delivery address carefully. This small habit helped him avoid mistakes when he used mobile services.

In the afternoon, he planned to relax in a nearby park. He used a bike-sharing app to find the nearest bike and rode there safely. On the way, he took photos of flowers with the phone camera, but he did not look at the screen while riding. After he arrived, he put the phone in his bag and walked for half an hour. The fresh air made him feel relaxed and ready for evening study.

In the evening, Chen Rui checked his homework and sent it to the teacher by email. He also wrote a short note about his phone use that day. He found that a smartphone could make life easier, but students should use it wisely and keep a balance between study and rest. He decided to stop using the phone thirty minutes before sleep. The plan was simple, but it helped him focus better the next day.
